Threadbare mantle of summer snow drapes the shoulders of Slovakia's High Tatra Mountains, a compact massif only 18 miles long. Jagged 8,711-foot Gerlach Peak, right center, caps the range; a national park embraces the slopes. Each year more than a million visitors—foreign tourists mingling with vacationing workers based from farms and factories—sample the region's superb skiing and scenery.

Beneath a banner that read "Through Music to Peace and Friendship Among Nations," we took seats behind the orchestra, where we could observe every gesture and expression of Yevgeniy Mravinsky conducting the visiting Leningrad Philharmonic. For two hours I enjoyed the unusual experience of watching one symphony conductor watching another. The Russians swept through the rich sonorances of Prokofiev's Symphony No. 6 as a single, pliant creature under Mravinsky's baton. Their conductor, spare and ascetic-looking with steel-rimmed glasses, pleaded, coaxed, *demand*ed the perfect performance. "Fantastic discipline," Rohan said admiringly over our coffee cups later. "We can't match the Russians in this. Our orchestras are collections of fine musicians, but individuals. It gives them more color."

Czechoslovakia has often been called the

"Constitutional monarchy" of the East. Such a description, however, is misleading. The country is a republic, and its constitution is a mere formality. The real power lies with the Communist Party, which has been in power since 1945. The country is a member of the Warsaw Pact, and its foreign policy is dictated by the Soviet Union. The country is a member of the Council of Europe, and its economy is based on heavy industry. The country is a member of the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe, and its culture is a blend of Western and Eastern influences.
